Covid-19: A survey from Atkins

The impact of the pandemic has been devastating and will continue to affect virtually every aspect of society for the foreseeable future. Alongside all that’s been written and said over the past six months, a survey has been commissioned by Atkins to try and understand the impact of lockdown and the environment that now exists. The survey gathered the responses from almost 400 public- and private-sector industry leaders across the UK who shared their experiences as well as their thoughts on the future.

Here are just some of the findings from the survey:

- 68% of infrastructure businesses expect their organisation’s outlook to have recovered to pre-crisis levels by Q4 2021.
- 95% of senior decision-makers believe that digital innovation will be increasingly important after the Covid-19 crisis.
- 76% of respondents believe that the sector will not emerge from Covid-19 in the same form.
- 65% of senior decision-makers would like to see the government provide a clear roadmap to help the sector with the recovery.
- Only 3% believe that their organisations are not well prepared for recovery.
